MANAGING NONPROFITS

Nonprofit managers oversee organizations dedicated to furthering a cause or mission. They manage nonprofit operations, analyze needs, and develop and implement programs to benefit members or communities or to assist specific causes. They frequently collaborate with a network of professionals focused on meeting the needs of community members.

NONPROFIT MANAGEMENT AT UCF

UCF offers a Master of Nonprofit Management and Graduate Certificate in Nonprofit Management. Both programs emphasize professional and ethical management practices in the nonprofit sector. An M.N.M. cohort option for out-of-state students and a dual M.N.M.-Master of Public Administration option are available as well.

Master of Nonprofit Management

The 36-credit-hour M.N.M. program equips students with the nonprofit management skills and program evaluation techniques needed for successful careers in nonprofit organizations. The program is oriented towards challenges facing nonprofit organizations, including those associated with finance, human resources, volunteer management and growth management.

Graduate Certificate

The graduate certificate program provides continuing education for both pre-career students and those already employed in the nonprofit sector and seeking advancement.

WHERE CAN I GET A JOB?

Many graduates of the M.N.M. program find employment with local area nonprofit organizations, open their own nonprofit or work with government agencies to enhance the nonprofit sector. They often work as directors or in leadership roles in finance, human resources, strategic planning and community engagement. Some graduates specialize in grant writing or fund raising and later advance into leadership roles.

Small grassroots nonprofit organizations are more likely to have small staffs with positions that overlap. The executive director also may raise funds, or the volunteer coordinator also may plan events. Large nonprofits may have national headquarters and regional offices that employ professionals in more specialized roles. They also need nonprofit leaders to oversee the efforts of specialized areas within the organization.

DID YOU KNOW?

Nonprofits are all around us and touch millions of lives each day. They advocate for clean air and water, for quality education, for taking care of our elders, for ending homelessness and income inequality, for enriching lives through the arts, and much more. Nonprofits are the key economic engine in our communities. — National Council of Nonprofits
